

Every plant must find its pot

We live in a continent that boasts the world's richest plant diversity. Isn't that amazing? How blessed are we!

Especially our succulents - so rich and manifold, sculpted by Nature into unique pieces of Art - perfect for their own little niches.

As an artist who has a large and diverse garden with many unique plants that I've collected, I worship Nature's miraculous work and shapes daily.

Part of this must surely be to compliment, enhance and honour each of these wonderful plants by placing some of them into a beautiful, unique and artistic ceramic pot to adequately display it and enable enough space for its precious roots.

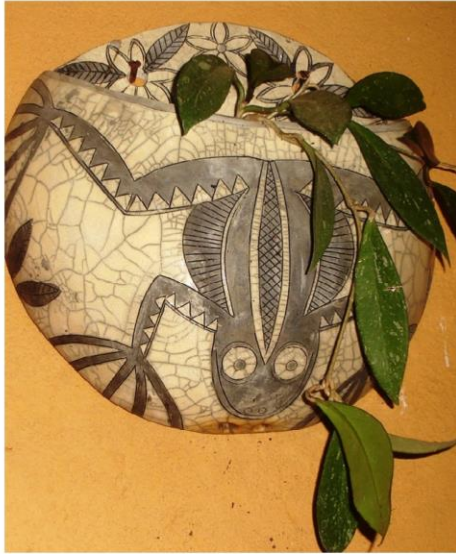

Here are some examples of how our pots are perfecting Botswana's gardens and homes. Special orders - even with personal inscriptions - are welcome.

We give personal lessons for fun; house and name signs; small hand basins and of course mugs, jugs, jars and bowls for your kitchen.

I learned Ceramic design as a profession in Germany, and have been practicing and teaching pottery for 38 years in Botswana.

I eventually specialized in Raku pottery, an ancient technique that allows fire and smoke to enter into the crackling glaze and temper each vessel in organic materials from Mother Earth.

I compliment this look with traditional local patterns and images of our precious wildlife.

We also use specific earthy glazes, harbouring a multitude of shades within itself. There are no harsh, flat or extremely glossy looks in Nature.
